

and skills. Women's professional advancement in the National Park Service paralleled the shift from the military ranger mode to that of the park as an outdoor classroom.

This is a pioneering study. Prior to this book, only a few women such as Mary Colter, who made significant architectural contributions to the Grand Canyon National Park, have been the subject of scholarly research. There had been no previous attempt to bring together the many facets of women's experiences and contributions to the National Park Service. But like all pioneering works, it touches on many individuals and themes that would profit from further exploration. Scholars and students of the National Park Service will find in this book a wealth of information, references to extensive primary sources and archives, as well as many leads for future research projects.
